HARVEST GIANT GARDEN CHRYSANTHEMUMS

A major advance in back-yard gardening has been achieved with the introduction of a new type of garden chrysanthemum which rivals in size and beauty florists' standard mums grown under greenhouse conditions.

The Harvest Giant varieties vary in flower size from four to seven inches in diameter. The flowers are deep and heavily petaled, typical of football types.

Of the 10 varieties, at least five will be in full bloom by mid-September, four others by late September and one by early October. They will make excellent show even in areas with early frost. Gardeners in these areas, of course, should select the earlier flowering varieties. One factor which can delay flowering time is an extremely hot August, a condition that affects all types of garden chrysanthemums.

Harvest Giants have the habit of staying in flower once the blooms open on the plant. One of the varieties, September Song, for example, is in full color by September 10 to 15 and will remain in flower until the middle of October.

The new mums are not difficult to grow, but there are several important requirements, that should be kept in mind. The plants are at their best in full sun. If they are not in full sun at least three quarters of the day, they will tend to be tall, mature late and produce smaller flowers.

As with any garden mum, pinching will keep plants compact and will result in more stems and flowers. Pinching should be done regularly until July 4, but not after that date or flowering will be delayed. The last pinch should leave the plants from nine to ten inches high. Disbudding after July 4 is optional. Plants not disbudded will produce more blooms, but the flowers will probably be about one-third smaller than those on disbudded plants.

Harvest Giants may be planted in the garden as late as June 15 will produce a bushy and compact plant in September.

The varieties are as follows:

INDIAN SUMMER. A red bronze. It is large, six inches and over, and flowers early.

PUMPKIN. An apricot-bronze shade. Flowers are medium large, five inches, and the plant is more compact than most of the others. It flowers in late September.

SEPTEMBER SONG. An orchid-rose shade. Blooms are five inches in diameter, and the variety will flower early.

TOUCHDOWN. A warm rose shade. Flower size is the largest of the 10 varieties, commonly being about six and one-half inches in diameter, but reaching up to seven and one-half inches if grown well. It is one of the late flowering varieties, with a few flowers sometimes showing in late September and full bloom coming in early October.

PINK HAZE. A light, clear pink. It is one of the earliest of the mums, with a flower size of four and one-half to five inches.

GOLD DUST. A golden yellow. While not the largest of the 10 varieties (four to four and one-half inches) it is the earliest. It is free blooming through the fall and may require some staking on early planted plants.

JACK-O-LANTERN. A lighter shade of yellow than Gold Dust. It is an early bloomer and the plant is compact. Flowers are from four to four and one-half inches, and the stems are extremely strong.

FULL MOON. White with touch of cream. The flowers are large ranging from five to six inches in diameter. The plant is of medium height, and flowering usually occurs in late September.

WHITE FROST. A pure white, which is not quite so large as Full Moon, but which flowers a full week earlier.

RED SKIN. A maroon red. Flowers are fairly large, five inches, and the plant features strong stems and short growth. It flowers medium early September.

Harvest Giant Mums are grown in pots before they are shipped to you, so that when they are planted in their permanent location no set back will effect the plants.

HIGH NOON. New for 1961--Cream colored flowers borne on compact, free flowering plants. Flowers will measure up to 5 inches in diameter.

GOLDEN ARROW. New for 1961--A fine deep golden yellow incurved. Good flower substance and a real football type flower.

AUTUMN LEAVES. New for 1961--A two tone apricot bronze semi-incurved. Nice flower form with good plant habit.

The price per plant is .75, or five for $3.25, 10 for $6.25, prepaid.

CHRYSANTHEMUM CULTURE

SOIL Any type of soil is good for Chrysanthemums, if the soil in which they are planted will grow other plants it will grow them. After plants have been planted they should not be fertilized until a good top growth has been started and roots have a good growth. Any good commercial fertilizer which contains nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium will bring the best results.

WATER When plants are set in the ground they should be watered enough so as to soak the ground at least to a depth of eight inches. Chrysanthemums require a lot of water, and if not kept moist at all times, will soon show signs of wilting. In the late summer when plants have a heavy growth they should be irrigated, not watered from the top as blight will soon affect them.

LOCATION Chrysanthemums like sunlight and should be planted where shade will not be on them a major part of the day. A sheltered location is best, where rain, wind and frost will not hit them directly. The plants should be set apart according to the variety and type. If the plant has large leaves or small and according to the height it will grow. The average distance should be between twelve to fifteen inches.

CHRYSANTHEMUM TYPES

ANEMONE This type has cushioned center with a single row of florets around, appears as a single. There are three types: large intermediate, and miniature.

DECORATIVE Medium in size of flower, not as large as the typical "football mums" but still showing many of the same characteristics. This is the most used in the garden varieties.

POMPON This type is small in flower but very abundant in bloom and color. Florets may be flat or round ball shape. The button types are in this same group with small thumb like flowers, with many on a stem.

QUILLED This type has petals with narrow, pointed tubers, that look much the same as some dahlia varieties. This type can be disbudded to one flower per stem.

SINGLES This type has usually flat petals with a light cushion center, with one or two rows of florets. This type can be disbudded, with the result of large flowers.

SPIDER This type is one of the most interesting groups, with flowers of large size. Florets are thread-like in appearance, with graceful pastel colors. This type should be disbudded to one flower per stem.

INCURVED Large "football mums" with florets curving in to give the massed effect. Many can be grown in pots to be protected before frost will blight them.
